It sets out the fundamental human rights to be universally protected.

FOCUS

We use the Universal Declaration of Human Rights as a guide to focus our work on increasing sustainable access to specific basic human rights. Our projects also utilize culturally appropriate traditional activities to preserve existing ways of life and cultural practices. Projects are targeted towards women, children, and the most vulnerable members of society, including widowed families.

EDUCATION ACCESS

People living in remote societies often face challenges in accessing education due to factors such as long travel distances, limited transportation options, lack of funding, and competing survival needs that make it difficult to dedicate time for learning. Often, the only education opportunities require children to leave their homes, creating hardships for families and threatening the continuation of cultural practices.

FOOD SECURITY

Most families rely heavily on livestock for their daily nutritional needs. Habitat loss, drought, water scarcity, inflation, and the effects of globalization threaten the availability and reliability of food supply in remote communities. Famine is a common cause of death among people living in remote areas, often exacerbated by challenges with water access.

SAFE WATER ACCESS

People in remote areas struggle with water scarcity and access to safe water due to the distance of water sources, lack of infrastructure, and changing climate. These challenges result in diseases, limited access to education and economic opportunities, and death. Sustainable solutions are necessary to improve the health and well-being of affected societies.

HEALTH SERVICES ACCESS

Factors such as long travel distances, limited transportation options, and lack of healthcare facilities, result in untreated illnesses and injuries. This can be particularly harmful for women who face additional health risks related to pregnancy and childbirth. Elderly people face difficulties due to their limited mobility and the long distances they may have to walk.

ECONOMIC FREEDOM

Economic opportunities lead to greater independence and stability, and improve the overall well-being of families. Supporting women through economic opportunities also has positive ripple effects on the community as a whole, leading to greater social and economic development.
